

Considering a district-wide, solution for language service needs?

Five key factors to look for:

BOTH VIDEO & PHONE

Both audio and visual services are necessary. While over-the-phone interpreting (O.P.I.), works for many families, video remote interpreting (V.R.I) is essential for hard of hearing families.

LANGUAGE & CONTEXT

Research and gather the most frequently spoken languages in your community. Make sure that the virtual solution you choose has experienced personnel to support teacher- parent conferences, I.E.P. meetings, working with special education teachers and supporting families on how to navigate the school system.

CENTRALIZED SUPPORT

For organizational purposes, centralize language services with a single provider that offers everything needed, various service modalities and languages to engage all families in their child's education.

COST-EFFECTIVE

Fair pricing, remembering that all work is done by a person, not artificial intelligence. Pay only for the minutes used and monitor the cost. Look for subscription options that include the number of minutes you expect to use monthly.

EASE OF USE

Simplicity, a strong language service provider offers multiple access points to an interpreter. Look for a vendor that allows you to access the service from any computer browser, mobile device, or landline phone.
